Synagogues explore new fundraising ideas

A group of synagogues in the city of Shushan are planning a new means of raising funds for their congregations. If successful it could become the practice in synagogues in this area as well.

Called a 'Behaviour Tax' it will see those who practice unacceptable behaviour in synagogue levied with fines that will be payable before high holiday seats are issued. Because most of the infractions occur on Shabbat and Yom Tov when writing is forbidden, the Board of Shushan Synagogues (B.S.S.), is bringing in famed memory expert Kevin Trudeau to train gabbaim to remember who they fined so that they can send out notices after Shabbat.

The infractions and amount of the fines follows -

Synagogue presidents were delighted with the new source of revenue. We may be able to keep our annual dues increase to 25% if this is successful as I think it will be said one.

A member of a liberal synagogue was heard to suggest that he was in favour of installing a mechitzah if it would mean more revenue from fines. Another possibility is that the fines could be used to regulate unacceptable behaviour in kiddush buffets such as holding up the line by talking, butting in, taking an extra plate for someone else, and complaining that the fish the previous week looked fresher.

Of course G.S.T will be extra on all fines.

We are proud and privileged to present this composition in preparation of Purim, promoting the performance of the Purim procedures. You are probably perplexed and perturbed that odical blows Purim all out of proportion. Don't other projects and programs have more priority than the precious printing of Purim Propaganda?

I propose that this is precisely Purim's Problem. Purim needs more PR. Purim is of paramount importance, providing the promise of Jewish perseverance despite pressure and persecution.
